Thermaltake announces a novel take on notebook coolers-- the Satellite, a 2-in-1 twin fan notebook cooler that's also a dual-speaker audio system within a easily portable package.

The Satellite looks like a cuboid when whole, but splits into two triangular sections. Each section carries a 50mm fan running at up to 2500 RPM and a "high quality" speaker, and can be folded according to how the user wants to use them.

Thus customers can use the two Satellite sections to provide more ergonomic typing and viewing angles.

Thermaltake also says the design is a Computex d&i award winner.

The Satellite is available now.
