

Twelve South MagicBridges Magic Trackpad With Magic Keyboard

Written by Marco Attard
09 February 2017

---

Twelve South presents a means to combine the Apple Magic Keyboard and Magic Trackpad 2 into a single control surface-- the MagicBridge, a device promising to let users "type and swipe more effectively."

The MagicBridge supports both left- and right-handed users, and has cutouts in the back for on/off switches and lighting connectors. Construction is in white polycarbonate matching the colour of the Apple peripherals, with silicon pads on the inside protecting each once inside the frame.

"Ever notice the Wireless Keyboard and Trackpad 2 look like they were supposed to go together? By connecting these profile twins, you'll create one larger keyboard that's much easier to use than the smaller pieces by themselves," Twelve South says. "When your trackpad is predictably beside your keys-- you can find it with your fingers without looking down. Touch-typing is now Touch-tracking. Cleaner, faster, more stable control. Now that's magic."

The MagicBridge is available now.

Go Twelve South MagicBridge