

SteelSeries and Targus Present Sniper Backpack

Written by Marco Attard
21 September 2017

Peripheral maker SteelSeries joins forces with Targus, "the original creator of the laptop bag," to create the SteelSeries x Targus Sniper-- a backpack able to hold a laptop up to 17.3-inch in size.

According to the two companies the Sniper is designed for gamer customers. It has a durable exterior, a padded laptop compartment and a "SafePort Sling Protection" system protecting the laptop from knocks and drops. An integrated rain cover protects everything from, well, the rain, while the main compartment holds a large mousemat, mouse, keyboard and controller.

The various compartments are detachable for versatility, and feature "clever materials choices" for more secure storage. Thus, it has a compartment for x2 headsets together with hidden water bottle storage on the side, a secret pouch personal belongings or small valuables and x2 detachable pouches (one small, one dedicated for cables and a headset).

In total the backpack has 26l capacity. It measures 35 x 33 x 55cm, and weighs 1.8kg. However SteelSeries still has to announce when it will actually be available.

Go SteelSeries x Targus Sniper