

Microsoft brings its curved keyboard back with the Comfort Curve 3000, now in a slightly more warped form that's 3 years in the making.

The new design tries to be a better option for straight-keyboard users, with uniform-sized QWERTY keys-- making it more similar to a standard keyboard.

The curvature redesign apparently also goes towards the third dimension, also in a bid to increase comfort, at least according to Microsoft.

Either way you can start offering your customers this keyboard's warping comforts sometime in August 2011.

Go Microsoft Comfort Curve Keyboard 3000