Nokia hoped to steal at least some of the limelight from Apple as it revealed not one, not two but six devices at Nokia World 2013-- a trio of Asha devices, two 6-inch Lumia devices and the first Nokia Windows tablet.

No doubt the tablet is the most intriguing device, seeing how the soon-owned-by-Microsoft Nokia presented what amounts to a Surface 2 killer. Dubbed the Lumia 2520, it is a Windows 8.1 (not Windows Phone) device with a 10.1-inch 1920x1080 display, Qualcomm Snapdragon 800 CPU, 6.7MP rear-facing camera, 8000mAh battery and 4G LTE support inside a glossy polycarbonate unibody in red, white, black or cyan.

Like other Windows RT devices the Lumia 2520 gets the Office RT suite (packs Word, Excel, Powerpoint and Outlook) for free, as well as Nokia software such as Music, HERE maps and the newly revealed Storyteller photo organiser.

Also presented is a "unique and stylish" accessory-- the Nokia Power Keyboard, an (as the name suggests) keyboard promising 5 extra hours of battery life and 2 USB ports.
