

Apple Could Sell 45 million iPhones in 2009

Written by Bob Snyder
03 April 2008

Gene Munster, Apple analyst at Piper Jaffray's, outlines the steps by which he thinks Apple could sell 45 million iPhones in 2009 -- introducing a 3G model and perhaps a lower-end version; capitalizing on international sales; and adding new features like games and remote purchases.

And in another report Munster says (in the consumer market) Mac's market share is up 10% worldwide and 21% in USA.

Go 45 Million iPhones?